

maps and historical paragraphs make the booklet worth saving for its permanent values.

Here, in the Pacific Northwest, readers will find pages 72-81 of most interest since they deal with the neighboring provinces of British Columbia and Yukon Territory. The map of British Columbia, the pictures and the descriptive paragraphs show most graphically what lies immediately to the northward of the State of Washington.

---

The Canadian Reciprocity Treaty of 1854. By CHARLES C. TANSILL. (Baltimore: The Johns Hopkins Press, 1922. Pp. 96.)

This scholarly study by the Professor of American History in the American University, Washington, D. C., will have a timely interest during the diplomatic and economic adjustments now going on between Canada and the United States.

---

David Thompson, Canada's Greatest Geographer. By J. B. TYRRELL. (Toronto: The Author, 1922. Pp. 8.)

Mr. Tyrrell is a mining engineer who has earned for himself a comfortable position among historians by his scholarly work in editing David Thompson's Narrative of His Explorations in Western America, 1784-1812, published at Toronto in 1916 by The Champlain Society.

The present little booklet contains an address, or, as the author calls it, "An Appreciation." The address was delivered at the ceremonies opening the David Thompson Memorial Fort at Lake Windermere, B. C., on August 30, 1922. Those who were not fortunate enough to attend those ceremonies are grateful to Mr. Tyrrell for making his address available to all readers. The spirit and purpose of his address are well related in his opening paragraph as follows:

"David Thompson was the greatest land geographer who ever lived; and, therefore, one of the greatest scientists. He came to Fort Churchill a 14-year-old boy from a London charity school in 1784. While his greatest work was being done during twenty-eight years, he was never within a thousand miles of any civilized community of five hundred souls. He died in obscure poverty sixty-five years ago and lies in a nameless grave at Montreal. The opening of the memorial museum and hall at Lake Windermere,