Announcements

¶ The leading article in this issue is written by C. J. Smith, a pioneer railroad man, a successful business man well known throughout the Pacific Northwest. His reminiscences will be widely appreciated. It is planned to publish other articles on early transportation experiences from well known authorities.

¶ "Van Ogle's Memory of Pioneer Days" is an article the pioneers will read with delight. He had passed his ninety-third birthday when he died at the State Soldiers' Home, in 1919. His active part in the Indian war and his relations with the first Governor of Washington Territory make his writing historically valuable.

¶ This number contains the index and title page for Volume XIII., for use of those who bind the volumes.

¶ Again an invitation is given to any reader to report any error detected in the articles on Territorial Newspapers and the Origin of Washington Geographic Names. There will be opportunity to correct such errors in a subsequent printing of those articles.
