¶ Judge Cornelius H. Hanford, one of the best known jurists of the Pacific Northwest, contributes to this issue an article on what is probably the most complicated chapter in the railroad history of the State of Washington. He writes from first hand information and his article will probably be accepted as definitive on the subject of the "Orphan Railroad and the Rams Horn Right of Way."

¶ Other articles are planned in the series giving the early history of railroads in Washington.

¶ Professor C. S. Kingston, of the State Normal School, Cheney, Washington, has prepared an interesting article on "The Introduction of Cattle into the Pacific Northwest," which will appear in the issue for July.

¶ Mr. Albert J. Thompson, who writes for this issue "Memories of White Salmon and Its Pioneers," is one of the most highly esteemed pioneers of the southern part of Washington. His present address is Oswego, Oregon.

¶ Mr. Victor J. Farrar resumes in this issue his editing of the Nisqually Journal as a documentary source in the history of the Northwest.
