

This excellent paper on the early geography of the Pacific Coast is grouped about three myths: 1. The mythical city of Quivira; 2. The Strait of Anian; 3. California as an Island. "California" is used in its broadest meaning so as to include the Pacific Coast from Lower California extending northward indefinitely. The first two of these topics relate to the Northwest Coast. Eight maps are reproduced to illustrate the text.

Mythology of Puget Sound. By HERMANN HAEBERLIN, Edited by ERNA GUNTHER SPIER. (New York: Reprinted from the Journal of American Folklore, Vol. 37, Pp. 371-438, 1924.)

The first authentic collection of Indian tales from Puget Sound, literally recorded, and edited from the notebooks of the late Doctor Haeberlin by Erna Gunther Spier of Seattle. These are primarily from Snohomish, Snuqualmi, and Skagit. In an introductory note, Franz Boas points out that the transformer tales form a group characteristic of Vancouver Island and Puget Sound, mythical figures of the northern coast appear here, and the tribes of the east Sound were influenced deeply by the tales of interior tribes.

The Custer Semi-Centennial Ceremonies, 1876-1926. By MAJOR A. B. OSTRANDER, and others. (Casper, Wyoming: Casper Printing and Stationery Company, 1926. Pp. 48.)

In addition to the account of the Custer semi-centennial ceremonies by the Indian war veterans and author, Major Ostrander, this pamphlet contains notes on the ceremonies by R. S. Ellison; the official report to the Custer Memorial Association by Brigadier General E. S. Godfrey, Retired; and a verbatim report of speeches and proceedings at the final ceremony, known as the Burial of the Hatchet, when survivors of the Indian wars, both white and red, clasped hands beside the newly erected monument to the unknown soldier on Custer's battlefield.

Copies of this pamphlet have been distributed by Major A. B. Ostrander, 227½ Belmont Avenue North, Seattle, Wash., and by Mr. R. S. Ellison, Vice-President of the Midwest Refining Company, Casper, Wyoming.
