Announcements

¶ The series of articles devoted to the History of Science in the State of Washington is progressing. Three new articles appear in this issue and four have appeared in previous issues. Others are in course of preparation.

¶ The second decennial index will occupy the October issue, rounding out the twentieth volume. Some of the earlier numbers are becoming scarce. It is likely that the price for complete sets will soon be advanced.

¶ It is a pleasure to include in this issue an article by the famous engineer, John F. Stevens, telling about his locating the line of the Great Northern Railway from Spokane to Puget Sound in 1890-1891.

¶ Judge Howay, well known to our readers, contributes an interesting incident in the life of Captain John Kendrick.

¶ The falsehood in regard to the attribute of the Continental Congress toward Captain James Cook has reappeared and receives another denial here in the Pacific Northwest.

¶ Death has claimed a famous pioneer and two beloved historians on the Pacific Coast. Tributes for the three appear in this issue.

¶ Lewis A. McArthur's article on "Early Washington Post Offices" once more reveals his devotion to research work in Northwestern history.

¶ J. Neilson Barry has found more materials in one of the Government's storehouses of information.
