

Puget Sound," "The Lure of Migration," "First Steps in Government," and "Indian Missions Fade Into White Churches."

Doctor Canse will find many enthusiastic readers of his book in his own denomination and many also who are not of that particular denomination. Collectors of Pacific Northwest Americana will gladly save it as an addition to the record of a most important epoch in the history of the old Oregon Country.

History of the Coeur d'Alene Mission of the Sacred Heart. By REVEREND EDWARD R. CODY. (Caldwell, Idaho: The Caxton Printers, Ltd., 1930. Pp. 47.)

This paper-covered booklet richly deserves saving in collections of Northwest Americana. It is well illustrated and tells the story of the Coeur d'Alene Mission of The Sacred Heart in a modest but effective way. The record of the courageous and unselfish missionaries, though all too brief, is a welcome addition to the slowly growing literature of similar efforts.

The Trans-Mississippi West. Edited by JAMES F. WILLARD and COLIN B. GOODYKOONTZ. (Boulder: University of Colorado, 1930. Pp. 366.)

This volume contains a series of papers read at a conference held at the University of Colorado, June 18-21, 1929. The three sessions were devoted to "Western Missions," "Western Transportation" and "The West in American Literature." There were six "Round Table Discussions" on pioneer problems. The paper of most interest to readers in the State of Washington was "Undeveloped Factors in the Life of Marcus Whitman" by Professor Archer B. Hulbert of Colorado College. He vigorously chides former historians for neglecting sources which he points out and discusses. He also brings forth a background of the Whitman Mission which has likewise been neglected. His terse brief paper will stimulate others in more extensive researches. It is quite probable that he, himself, will prepare a volume that ought to be a welcome addition to the literature about Marcus Whitman, famous missionary of the Pacific Northwest.
