Announcements

- ¶ Byron Phelps, former Mayor of Seattle, saved the manuscript of an address given by Major W. V. Rinehart in 1914. The result is our publication of the personal memoirs of a fine old Indian War veteran.
- ¶ As a final chapter in the history of the Captains Moore, father and son, written from diaries and other personal papers, Mr. C. L. Andrews gives us the article on the son, Captain William D. Moore.
- ¶ Mr. Edward W. Allen, an attorney of Seattle, has for years collected works about Alaska. In this issue we have his translation of a study by M. Henri Vignaud on an old map giving the earliest indication of what is now Bering Strait.
- ¶ The author of the article, "The Family-Company-Compact," is an Honors History graduate of the University of British Columbia, a former American Antiquarian Society Fellow in History and International Relations at Clark University and at present a Fellow in International Law of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace at Harvard. His citations reveal abundant researches in the archives and newspapers of British Columbia.
- ¶ Professor Sperlin is drawing to a close his study of the Brackenridge Journal.
- ¶ Mrs. Jessie Johnston Clegg who reviews briefly four recent works on Alaska, has been a resident of that Territory for nearly thirty years. Her husband, Cecil Hunter Clegg, is Judge of the United States District Court, Fourth District, at Fairbanks, Alaska. During the past winter, Mrs. Clegg has been a student of Library Science in the University of Washington.
- ¶ Judge F. W. Howay of New Westminster, B.C., supplies a book review and also has one of his own books reviewed by another.
