

water. Seattle has one brief reference to an Indian attack. On the other hand Spokane accounts for eleven references.

The industry of the author and the wise skill of the publisher have combined to make A History of the Pacific Northwest an attractive and worth while book that will surely receive a generous measure of attention.

Montana in the Making. By NEWTON CARL ABBOTT. (Billings: Gazette Printing Company, 1931. Pp. 520.)

The author is Professor of Social Sciences in the Eastern Montana Normal School at Billings. His beautifully printed and elaborately illustrated book is intended for school use. Chancellor Melvin A. Brannon, University of Montana, says in the introduction:

"Montana in the Making is a class room and laboratory story of pioneers who came to the great Northwest in response to the urge for adventure and for achievement due to the buoyant human spirit within them. This laboratory and field study of Montana history was carried on in various localities of the state and all kinds of popular bulletins and general publications were drawn upon for materials."

The text and arrangement of topics reveal this industry as well as a dependable scholarship. One of the most helpful features is a series of eight small maps or graphs showing the political development of the Northwest from which the map of Montana emerges. Other maps, well selected illustrations, topical questions and suggested readings combine in a way that should make the book a delight to both teacher and student.

Two Warriors. By EDWARD LINCOLN SMITH. (Seattle: Frank McCaffrey at his Dogwood Press, 1931. Pp. 47.)

The two essays "John Knox, Saint or Sinner" and "Oliver Cromwell, His Place in History," were prepared by Rev. Edward Lincoln Smith for the Monday Club. They were given exquisite embodiment in this little book by Mr. Caffrey.

The Ruins of Kiatuthlanna, Eastern Arizona. By FRANK H. H. ROBERTS, JR. (Washington: Bureau of American Ethnology, 1931. Pp. 195. $0.65.)

This is Bulletin 100 in the publications by the Bureau of American Ethnology. The text and the superb illustrations reveal a rich harvest during the investigations conducted from May to September,