- ¶ Professor J. Orin Oliphant, now of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, was formerly with the State Normal School, Cheney, Washington, and was then a Contributing Editor of this Quarterly. His contribution in this issue is part of his dissertation for the doctorate at Harvard University.
- ¶ Mr. T. C. Elliott has begun another David Thompson series, this time covering explorations in the Pend Oreille region. Recent developments there give this series a peculiar timeliness.
- ¶ Mr. J. Neilson Barry reveals his tireless energy in research by his article on "Spaniards in Early Oregon" and deftly adds his theory on the origin of the name of Oregon. There is also a news note about some of his other work.
- ¶ Judge Howay sent in some notes on a rare find. He hardly expected them to appear as a formal contribution.
- ¶ The brief article by Clarence L. Andrews is evidently a result of his research for his recently published book, The Story of Alaska, reviewed in this issue.
- ¶ Mr. Alfred Tunem's article is extracted from his Master of Arts thesis at the University of Montana, 1931.
- ¶ An introductory note explains the reprinting of the Longmire Narrative in our Documents.
- ¶ The Book Reviews are unusually rich in this issue.
