- ¶ British Columbia and Washington having been part of the Old Oregon Country, their early histories interlock. This present number might be called a special British Columbia issue though most of the articles overlap as to areas.
- ¶ Judge F. W. Howay, of New Westminster, is represented by an article and a book review dealing with Alexander Mackenzie.
- ¶ T. C. Elliott's second article on David Thompson's work in the Pend Oreille country treats of both British Columbia and the State of Washington.
- ¶ Dale L. Pitt is a prominent mining man in British Columbia. His article is concerned with that Province but it also tells of American miners there in the early days.
- ¶ Margaret Ross has worked in the University of British Columbia in preparing her article on a reformer in that neighboring portion of Canada.
- ¶ The continuation of Alfred Tunem's "The Dispute Over the San Juan Islands Water Boundary" is a pointed example of the overlapping history.
- ¶ Professor Oliphant's review of Professor Merk's George Simpson rounds out this overlapping. This new book is alike important to Oregon, Washington and British Columbia.
- ¶ The Narrative of James Longmire is completed in this issue. The warning should be repeated that readers must remember that this document was written in 1892 and that many of those mentioned have passed away since that date.
