

North which was awarded the July selection of the Book of the Month Club. It was told by Mr. Welzl to two reporters in Czechoslovakia who have written the narrative and it has been translated by Paul Selver. The tale begins in Siberia where the author was working on the Trans-Siberian railway and traces his journey with horse and cart across Siberia to the Arctic Ocean. He settles on the New Siberian Islands and the book chronicles thirty years of life and adventures there, not the least of which is when the author is made chief of the Islands, with power of life and death in his hands.

The book is a good story and will doubtless find many readers. It cannot be depended upon, of course, as authentic history, but it does present a vivid picture of Eskimo life and customs.

The Girl in the Silk Dress and Other Stories. By M. EUGENIE PERRY. (Ottawa, Canada: Overbrook Press, 1931. Pp. 144, $1.00.)

A collection of seven short stories by a Victoria author. Several of them are semi-historical romances of Vancouver Island.

Montana in the Making. By NEWTON CARL ABBOTT. (Billings: Gazette Printing Company, 1931. Pp. 520.)

This text-book on Montana history makes use of the problem method of teaching. The story as told includes much adventure and romance. The excellent illustrations and maps, together with the Questions and Problems which follow each chapter, all add to the teaching value of the book. At the end of each section are Supplementary Reading Lists.

240 Chinook Jargon Words. By GEORGE COOMBS SHAW. (Seattle: Johnson, 1932. Pp. 16.)

This little booklet has been compiled for popular use by the author of a standard work on the Chinook Jargon and How to Use It (Seattle, 1909). Speaking of the Jargon, the author states: "It has not only been the source of great and varied benefits, but its place in the history of the Pacific Northwest and the world-wide recognition given to it by philologists and historians, encourages us to believe that the day will never come when interest in its strange savage vocabulary shall wane."
