

icana, however, will be interested in a hunting log recounting an expedition by Edwin McClellan to Alaska. While the initial interest centers about the hunting trip, many of the entries relate largely to observations upon the country traversed. Many excellent photographs are reproduced. The work was prepared and privately printed for the author.

Campus Memories. By FRANK McCAFFREY. (Seattle: The Dogwood Press, 1933. Pp. 97. $2.00.)

Frank McCaffrey, through his Acme Press, has long since earned the reputation of being one of the outstanding master printers of the Pacific Coast. In recent years he has added The Dogwood Press from which he has issued a number of meritorious books in especially attractive form.

In this last case, Campus Memories, he is not only the printer but also the author and illustrator. With his camera he secured the twenty-nine illustrations and with his pen he produced the delicate ornaments of the initial pages. His daughter, to whom the book is dedicated, entered the University of Washington as a freshman in 1933 and the printer-father prepared this book to call attention to many of the historic objects on the campus for the benefit of the daughter and her classmates. The type, stock and binding combine to make the book unusually attractive.

Allen R. Benham, Professor of English, in a review for the University of Washington Daily, says: "I should think that this is just the kind of picture which the growing army of Washington graduates would like, to keep them in remembrance of their stay at Washington."

Yellowstone National Park. By HIRAM M. CHITTENDEN. Fourth Edition. (Stanford University, California: Stanford University Press, 1933. Pp. 286. $3.00.)

This new edition of the well known classic by the late General Hiram M. Chittenden has been revised and brought down to date by Eleanor Chittenden Cress, daughter of the author, and Isabelle F. Story, editor in the National Park Service. In their preface they say: "Obviously many changes have occurred in the park, in administrative and other matters, since the issuance of the last edition, and bringing the book up to date has involved extensive revision. Wherever possible in this edition, however, the changes are recorded in the form of footnotes, thus preserving the original text."

Friends of General Chittenden are delighted that his fine book has been revised. Tourists will quickly sense the book's value and librarians will need to supplement their older editions with this newest one on account of the valuable revisions.

Men of Champoeq. By CAROLINE C. DOBBS. (Portland, Oregon: Metropolitan Press, 1932. Pp. 218. $1.50.)

In tune with the recent wave of interest in the biographies of early settlers in the Oregon Country, Mrs. Dobbs has here collected what she could find about fifty-two of those who participated in the founding of the Provisional Government of Oregon at Champoeq in 1843. These are the ones she says who voted "yes" at that critical time. She has followed such historians as George H. Himes in compiling that affirmative list.

It should be noted that others, like J. Neilson Barry, are disputing the correctness of the list and it may yet be shown that others, now listed as opposed, deserve inclusion in the list of those who favored the Provisional Government.

All of these biographies collected by Mrs. Dobbs are interesting. In view of the present visit of the historic old frigate Constitution, it is appropriate to single out of the list William Johnson, known as "Old Ironsides," because he served on that craft in the famous victory over the Guerriere and cherished a picture of the battle in his pioneer cabin. He is credited with having built the first cabin in the present City of Portland.

Vigilant search by the author failed to secure all the vital statistics but a calculation of what she did find shows the average age of the men on arrival in Oregon was 30.4 years and the average at death was 73.5 years.

An addendum says the author is the wife of John F. Dobbs, President of Pacific University, Forest Grove, Oregon.

History and Romance of the San Juan Islands. By SOPHIE WALSH. (Anacortes: American Press, 1932. Pp. 24. $1.00.)

The author of this modest booklet, which is well worth saving, acknowledges help from many and closes her foreword thus: "I thank you all, and hope you will like this little glimpse enough to encourage someone to write a real history."

Seattle Public Library, Forty-Second Annual Report. (Seattle, Public Library, 1932. Pp. 8.)

In one sense this tiny pamphlet is the most pathetic public document received in years. Retrenchments on account of the depression
