George H. Himes Is Ninety

Portland witnessed a fine celebration of the ninetieth birthday of George H. Himes on May 18, 1934. It was sponsored by the Thirty-five Year Club of the First Congregational Church of that city.

Dr. Raymond B. Walker was toastmaster. The invocation was offered by Dr. C. H. Harrison, Superintendent of the Oregon Congregational Conference. The cutting of the cake was accompanied by a Song of Tribute to Mr. Himes, written by Mrs. Carrie B. Adams. The group singing of the Song of the Pioneers was led by Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Adams. A vocal solo by Mr. Everett Craven was accompanied by Miss Kate Whalley, pianist. Addresses of appreciation of the personality, citizenship and long and active service of Mr. Himes were delivered by Governor Julius L. Meier (in the form of a telegram of felicitation); a representative of Joseph Carson, Mayor of Portland; Judge C. H. Carey, President of the Oregon Historical Society; Judge George Rossman, member of the First Church; B. F. Irvine, editor of the Oregon Journal.

A fine portrait of Mr. Himes was presented to the church. It was the work of Gladys Gilbert, well known artist. All available seats, 225, were occupied. Near the guest of honor were seated thirty-six of his descendants including great grandchildren. Mrs. Emily Lindsley Ross kindly sent details of this beautiful and well-deserved festival. The Oregonian on the next morning carried an appreciative article, stressing the fact that bright and early on that big day Mr. Himes had appeared at his desk for history work as usual.

Oregon Historical Quarterly

Another fine issue of this publication has appeared for June, 1934. It is Volume XXXV., No. 2. The first article, 'Snake Country Expedition, 1824-25," is by Professor Frederick Merk of Harvard University, whose volume Fur Trade and Empire: George Simpson's Journal received cordial reviews in 1932. This present article appeared simultaneously in the Mississippi Valley Historical Review. T. C. Elliott has an extended article entitled "The Murder of Peu-Peu-Mox-Mox." Oscar O. Winther discusses the "California Stage Company in Oregon." Editor Nellie B. Pipes has two articles: "Journal of John H. Frost, 1840-43," and "The Oregon

Printing Association." Jamieson Parker tells about "Historic American Buildings Survey." There is also the usual rich harvest of book reviews and news notes.

Marine Museum

In the May, 1934, issue of The Northwest Naturalist much attention is given to the establishment of the Marine Museum by the Puget Sound Academy of Science on the ship St. Paul at the Government Locks, Ballard. Gratitude is there shown to C. Arthur Foss who provided the ship as the home for the Museum.

United States Geographic Board

In this Quarterly for October, 1933, the record of the reports was brought down to April 5, 1933, or bulletin No. 25. In the issue for April, 1934, an item was published about the large (834 pages) Sixth Report. Soon after the arrival of that Report, it was announced that the United States Geographic Board was being abandoned and the work would be assigned to some officer in the Interior Department.

There has now arrived fifteen of the smaller bulletins of decisions, Numbers 26 to 41 inclusive, from May 3, 1933, to May 2, 1934. Most of these were devoted to National Parks, where studies had been in progress for years. No. 29, June 30, 1932, embraces such studies for Mount Rainier National Park. The date of publication is 1934, indicating that the record had been held for possible corrections after that date of June 30, 1932. This pamphlet will prove of continued importance for those who visit and write about the Park.

Early Cattle Trade on Puget Sound

Professor J. Orin Oliphant had an article on "The Cattle Trade on Puget Sound, 1858-1890" in Agricultural History for July, 1933. The footnotes indicate that he has searched abundantly in the newspapers and other sources in Washington, Oregon and British Columbia. The materials in this article are taken from his unpublished doctoral dissertation, "The Range-Cattle Industry in the Oregon Country to 1890," at Harvard University.
