

and cordially he traced the man's career culminating in the Presidency of the University of Washington and, later, the Presidency of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. The address was rounded out with this tribute:

"He was stricken with that fatal illness on the steamship going from San Francisco to Seattle, the home of the university which he had made noteworthy, the home of the university into which he had poured the very best of his life and mind and strength. There come to my mind the lines of Robert Louis Stevenson's 'Requiem' as applying with all their fulness to Henry Suzzallo's end. As I recall them, they are these:

Here he lies, where he longed to be;
Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
And the hunter home from the hill."

Those who appreciate that memorial gathering in New York will also appreciate the fact that the great Library of the University of Washington, built during President Suzzallo's administration, is now named The Henry Suzzallo Library.

EDMOND S. MEANY

The Indian Tribes of North America. By THOMAS L. MCKENNEY and JAMES HALL. A New edition, edited by Frederick Webb Hodge. (Edinburg: John Grant, 1933. 3 vols. Pp. 442+458+355. 2/5/0).

For library use this new edition of McKenney and Hall's Indians is in several ways superior to the original folio edition. The size is more convenient, ample notes are supplied for the student, and a lengthy introduction supplies biographical and bibliographical material of great value. The paper and type are excellent and the illustrations are faithfully reproduced in color.

CHARLES W. SMITH

The Lummi Indians of Northwest Washington. By BERNHARD J. STERN. (New York: Columbia University Press, 1934. Pp. 127. $2.00.)

This book is number XII in "Columbia University Contributions to Anthropology," edited by Franz Boas, Professor of Anthropology in Columbia University. Such auspices hail the book as a dependable and professional piece of work.

The book is divided into three parts: "The Cycle of Life,"

"Tribal Culture," and "Legend and Lore." The book is based on the author's ethnological research in 1928-1929. The author says in the Introduction: "Because of the tribe's geographic isolation until recent years, Lummi culture has remained relatively alive in spite of the aggressively disruptive encroachments of the whites whose exploitation of the Indians has been flagrant in this region."

Readers and users of the book in the State of Washington will gladly recognize friendly and helpful people in the author's acknowledgment as follows: "The author is especially indebted to Joseph Hillaire, a Lummi Indian whose sincere interest in preserving the traditions of his people made him an eager and intelligent informant. Among the other members of the tribe who served as informants were August Martin, Matt Paul and Mrs. Matt Paul, William McClusky, Timothy Jefferson and Frank Hillaire."

Among the other books in this series are four by Professor Boas on the neighboring tribes in British Columbia and one other from the State of Washington: Quilente Texts by Manuel J. Andrade (1931).

Fiftieth Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology. By M. W. STIRLING. (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1933. Pp. 7.)

Like the Forty-ninth Annual Report, this is a tiny pamphlet containing only the administrative report. The day of the old reports in royal octavo size is past. The scientific papers will now appear in the series of Bulletins.

Washington Landmarks Located in Lewis County. By N. B. COFFMAN. (Chehalis: The Advocate, 1934. Pp. 9.)

This booklet comprises the address given by Mr. Coffman at the annual meeting of the Washington State Historical Society in Tacoma on February 3, 1934. The two topics covered are the Jackson Prairie Court House, Washington's oldest judicial and administrative building, and the O. B. McFadden Home in Chehalis, commemorating the seventy-fifth anniversary of its construction. Mr. Coffman is one of the State's most esteemed pioneer bankers. In late years he has been devoting much time in compiling and writing the history in and around Lewis County.
